DR. FRANKLIN ABROAD. A CURIOUS LETTER, HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED,

FROM BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. The following letter, which, we believe, has never been published hitherto, gives some very curious notes of the observations and reflections of Dr. Franklin upon his first visit to France. It is addressed to his wife: Paris, Sept. 14, 1767.

DEAR POLLY :- I am always pleased with a letter from you, and I flatter myself that you may be sometimes pleased with one from me, though it should be of little importance, such as this, which is to consist of a few occasional remarks made here, and on my journey hither.

Soon after I left you in that agreeable somaking a trip with Sir John Pringle into France. We set out on the 28th past. All the way to Dover we were furnished with post-chaises hung so as to lean forward, the top coming down over one's eyes like a hood, as if to prevent one's seeing the country, which being one of my greatest pleasures, I chaise leaning forward was an ease to the horses, and that the contrary would kill which were no reasons at all, and made me, as upon a hundred other occasions, almost wish that mankind had not been endowed with a reasoning faculty, since they know so little how to make use of it, and so often mislead themselves by it, and that they had

At Dover the next morning, we embarked for Calais with a number of passengers who had not been before at sea. They would previously make a hearty breakfast, because till supper time. Doubtless they thought that when they had paid for their breakfast they had a right to it, and that when they had swallowed it they were sure of it. But they were obliged to deliver it up. If you, my dear friend, ever go to sea, take my advice, and live sparingly a day or two beforehand; the sickness, if any, will be lighter, and sooner over. Got to Calais that day.

Various impositions are suffered from boatter. I know not which are most rapacious, the English or the French; but the latter have, with their knavery, the most politeness. The roads we found equally good with ours in England. But then the poor peasants complained to us sadly that they were obliged to work upon the roads full two months in the year, without being paid for their labor: whether this is true or no, or whether, like Englishman, they grumble, cause or no cause, I have not been able fully to inform myself. The women we saw on the road to Boulogne, and in the inns and villages, were generally of dark complexions; but arriving at Abbeville, we found a sudden change-a multitude of women in that place appearing remarkably fair.

As soon as we left Abbeville, the swarthiness returned. I speak generally: for there are some fair women as at Paris, who, I think, are not whitened by art. As to rouge, they don't pretend to imitate nature in laying it on. There is no gradual diminution of color from the full bloom on the middle of the cheek to the faint tint near the sides: nor does it show itself differently in different faces. I have not yet had the honor of being at a lady's toilet, to see how it is laid on; but I fancy I could tell you how it is done. Cut a hole of three inches diameter in a piece of paper; place it on the side of your face in such a manner as that the top ration of Georgetown, D. C., for Taxes due on of the hole may be just under your eye; then them respectively for the year 1859, with costs with a brush dipped in the color, paint your and charges—the rate of Tax being 87 cents on face and paper together; so when the paper is taken off, there will remain a patch of red exactly the form of the hole. This is the mode from the actress on the stage upwards, through all the ranks of ladies to the princesses of the blood; but it stops there, the queen not using it, having in the serenity, complacency, and benignity that shine so eminently in (or rather through) her countenance, sufficient beauty, though now an

You see I speak of the Queen as if I had seen her, and so I have; for you must know I have been at Court. We went to Yersailles last Sunday, and had the honor of being presented to the King. He spake to us both very graciously and cheerfully; is a handsome man, has a very lively look and appears younger than he is. In the evening we were at the Grand Cou-vert, when the family sup in public. The form of those sitting at table was this: [Here a diagram is given, showing the manner in which the royal family are placed at the table. The table, you see, was half a hollow

The improvements consist of the Court brought us up through the crowd a COTTAGE RESIDENCE, Stable, a new stand between the King and Madame Adelaide out-houses. There is a well of fine water in the and me between the Queen and Madame Victoire. The King talked a good deal to Sir John, asking many questions about our royal some notice of me. That's saying enough; for I would not have you think me so much pleased with this King and Queen as to have a less regard than I used to have for ours .-No Frenchman shall go beyond me in thinking my own King and Queen the very best in the world, and the most amiable. The civilities we every where received give us the strongest impressions of French politeness. It seems to be a point settled from either, and bounded partly by the extension here universally, that strangers are to be treated with respect; and one has just the Alexandria by the Turupike, is about five miles. same deference shown one here, by being a stranger, as in England by being a lady .-The Coustom-house officers at Porte St. Dennis, as we entered Paris, were about to seize stream which runs through it.
